Bunnahabhain Stiùireadair
Islay. 46.3% ABV

To create Stiuireadair (SpellCheck suggests "sturdier." I'm going with this one), they select first and second fill sherry casks with Bunnahabhain single malt whisky spirits of varying ages and warehouse locations to construct a dram that truly exposes the coastal nature of the distillery location. Stiuireadair means "helmsman" in Scots Gaelic.

Color: Amber gold.
Nose: Bright and with sherries of some description pulling you in, with an element of coastal influence spice, the sherry makes definite hints of plums and cherries, perhaps damsons. All feel right; there is a nice vanilla sweet custard wafting at me also. Palate: The fruits I taste are a wee bit drier than the nose, perhaps raisins and sultanas. The mouthfeel is cream, the taste is nutty and briny. Vanilla caramel toffee sauce: perhaps the custard on the nose is being poured over a sticky toffee pudding made with juicy dates? To say the finish is long is perhaps an understatement; it's still there, sweet and fruity to start; that sea salt comes toward the end.
