Benronach Single Malt Scotch Whisky
Speyside. 10 YO. 43% ABV

The Benromach 10 is generally well-regarded as a solid, balanced Speyside single malt with a unique character, offering a good introduction to the distillery's style. Reviewers highlight its complex nose, with notes of honey, red fruits, and a subtle smokiness that is not overpowering. The palate is often described as oily, with flavors of sherry, spice, and a lingering warmth. While some find the finish a bit short, it generally receives positive feedback for its overall balance and value, especially at its price point.

- Nose: Many reviewers note a complex nose with notes of honey, red fruits (cherry), and a subtle smokiness. Some also detect hints of charcoal BBQ, earthy notes, and even a touch of eucalyptus.
- Palate: The palate is often described as oily and full-bodied, with flavors of sherry, spice, and a lingering warmth. Some find the palate to be more flattened or muted over time.
- Finish: The finish is generally considered to be of medium length and warm, with some spice and citrus notes.

Bothan Lowland Single Malt Scotch
Sherry Cask (750ml) NAS 43% ABV

Bothan Lowland Single Malt Scotch Whisky, particularly the Sherry Cask expression, is generally described as a light, citrusy, and floral whisky with sweet cereal notes. It's noted for being a delicate and balanced Lowland-style whisky, often matured in ex-bourbon and sherry casks. While some find it enjoyable and pot entially a good introduction to Scotch, others find the sweetness a bit overpowering and the finish short.
Specific points from reviews:

- Light and Citrusy:

Bothan is consistently described as light-bodied and citrus-forward, which is typical for Lowland Scotch.

- Sherry Cask Influence:

The Sherry Cask expression offers notes of vanilla, spice, and grain, along with the bright fruity notes from the sherry maturation.

- Potential for Sweetness:

Some reviewers found the sweetness from the sherry cask to be a bit overwhelming or cloying, particularly as the flavor develops.
